Cyclo-olefins can be polymerized in the presence of metallocenes to give polymers having high and predictable properties. For instance, high molecular weight polymers of cycloolefins having recurring or pendant aromatic structures can be prepared by the process disclosed in Japanese Kokai No. 9-83796. The cyclic olefin polymer prepared in accordance with this process is highly crystalline and can have a high molecular weight. The crystals in this polymer can contain a substantial amount of oxygen, which is believed to result from the use of hydrogen in preparing metallocene complexes. Although these polymers have high molecular weights, and in particular have a narrow molecular weight distribution, they may not be capable of being readily melted and shaped without degradation. Thus, to prepare films or molded articles of polymers of cyclo-olefins, there is still a need to find an acceptable process for preparing cyclo-olefin polymers capable of being melt processed. In one aspect, the invention is a process for preparing a cyclo-olefin polymer. The process includes mixing a cyclo-olefin, metallocene catalysts and an aluminum alkyl compound and contacting the mixture with hydrogen and a catalyst activator under a condition of superatmospheric pressure and temperature sufficient to form a solid polymer.
